husband may not be a scold at home, but there is a reason for that. He has all day to vent his grouch against others and may be able to go to his home in a most cheerful mood. He may have scolded the street car conductor, the waiter at his lunchroom, those under him in the office and a long list of men in various walks of life. His wife is deprived of that privillege. The chances are that she has been cooped up all day, nursing her wrath withbut chance to blow off steam until her husband comes home.

FOETRY.

Oh, the day I went a shopping!
Went to do my Christmas Shopping!
Went to buy a munt for Mother,
Went to buy a pipe for Father,
Went to buy a dul for Grandma,
And gold epectacies for Baby—
No—oh, no:—it was the other
Way about! But Mercy Graclous!
Such a wild, bewildering chaos
was the crowded shopping district.
Twas enough to drive me frantic.
Ever thicker, thicker, thicker,
Surged the crowd at all the counters,
Ever deeper, deeper, deeper, Surged the crowd at all the counters, Ever deeper, deeper, deeper, deeper, deeper, Planged my land into my pocket. Recklessly I spent my savings; Paid too much for Katie's present; Bought a clock for Leonora, When I know that she has seven! Bought a chafing dish for Robert, Though he simply hates Welsh rare-bit!

But no one can russen clearly bit!

But no one can reason clearly
In a jostling crowd of people;
Hussling, bustling, frantle people
Matching sumples, snatching bargains,
Asking questions, scolding salesgiris,
Once I asked a haughty walker
To direct me, to the "Notions"
But the crowd around that counter
Squeezed and jammed like surging waters!

Squeezed and jammed like surging waters!

Homeward then I sadly hied me,
Saying, "I will go tomorrow.

Bright and early in the morning.

And before the crowd sassembles.

I will do my Christmas shopping."

But you know how many duties
Face a housewife in the morning.

Johnnies iuncheon. Suey's mittens,
Baby's bottle, Bridget's orders,
All at once to be looked after.

Husband going, tradesman coming,
And the telephone bell ringing.

Till the morning, swiftly slipping,
Is half gone before I'm ready
Once again to start out shopping.

Once again to start out shopping.

Once again to struggle vainly

With the overworked floorwalker,
With the weary, hurried salesgirls.

With impatient fellow shoppers.

Then I vow a deep and mighty

Yow within my panting bosom

That next Christmas i will surely
Buy my presents in September.

Or November at the lates!
